

INTERNATIONAL ECONOMICS AND LAW

Diploma: International Master in Business Studies, 1st year

Description: Structural policies are the laws, rules and market settings aimed at supporting sustainable economic development. This course introduces two components of structural policies that greatly influence firm behavior: labor and product market regulations. It takes into account of the context of slow growth - along with low efficiency of fiscal and monetary stimulus - that reinforces the calls for structural policy reforms. Understanding these structural policies is essential to get a good overview of the world economic situation and perspectives. This is also an asset when working in international institutions.
